FETE AT WELLESLEY COLLEGE.
A DAY OF ROYAL PLEASURE.

[Correspondence of the Portland Transcript.]

If there is one evidence more conclusive than another of the progress of our American Society in a healthful, intellectual and moral direction it is clearly to be discerned in the greatly advanced means of feminine education now open to the sex, and one of these great opportunities was fondly added to our mind on Thursday, the 23d ult., by a visit to Wellesley College. The Student's Aid Society connected with this flourishing institution for the education of young women, gave a brilliant fete to their friends and many representative men and women on that day, and accordingly some five hundred friends left for Wellesley, distant about fifteen miles, by a special train from Boston, at the Boston and Albany Railroad station. After half an hour's ride the pleasant town of Wellesley is reached, and a large number of spacious carriages were in waiting to convey the guests to the college.

After a short time, the porter's pretty lodge was reached at the entrance to the spacious grounds, some three hundred acres in extent. When before did any college ever possess so ample a domain? A serpentine road of half a mile in length brought us to the edifice, and we alighted under its deep portico.

The College building, which is very extensive and of a modern style of architecture, is very finely located on a high ridge of artificially graded and terraced land, bordering upon the little lake Waban, a lovely sheet of water which is greatly enjoyed by the lady students in their healthful exercise of boating in summer, and of skating in winter.

As we reached the grand entrance doors, the strains of Hall's Boston Band met the ear, in one of Strauss' delicious waltzes brilliantly. The ladies appeared, not indeed in full evening costume, but wearing black silks for the most part, with full dress hats and light kid gloves. In fact we heard a beautiful woman, say in Cambridge before we started, "I declare I don't know what to wear," but she might as well have been assuming this statue. The guests were presented to Miss Ada Howard, President, Mrs. Henry F. Durant, whose husband was the great founder of the College, and Mrs. Arthur Weakinson, of Cambridge, the President of the Society giving the fete, and Mrs. Forote, the mother of Mrs. Durant, and other ladies pressing it in the interests of the institution.

As the brilliant company was gathered in the rotunda with the wide corridors running from it in four directions, with rare plants springing from a fernery in the center, a water fountain playing in its midst, and the sweet strains of music almost inviting to a dance, was it unnatural that the senses should be unwontedly elevated, and a joyous flow of animal spirits prevail? The freedom of the College, in its public rooms, was accorded to all, and it was noticeable how very polite and attentive the three hundred and twenty-five young ladies were in aiding the company to find any particular room or person. "Would you like to see the library or chapel?" "Shall we conduct you to the physical lecture room?" "Would you like to see any person in particular?" were the kind interrogatories that met one on every side.

At 1 o'clock a procession was formed which marched without great hesitation to the large dining hall, where an ample and elegant collation was spread out for our delectation. The young ladies acted as waiters, and "the faculty" as well, and again were they very attent ve and polite.

After lunch, the fine library, embracing an excellent collection of books in all departments of literature, and many in costly bindings, too, was visited. Here the silken banners of the different boat clubs were placed, like the battle trophies in St. George's chapel at Windsor, inscribed—"Evangeline," "Argo," "May Flower," "Portia," etc.

At 3 o'clock, after a full exploration of the lecture rooms, the examination of the water-color paintings, the beautiful art room, new as yet, and to be filled in the future with copies of the great masters' works, with a promenade under the wide portico on the west front of the building, overlooking Lake Waban, all assembled in the chapel to attend the exercises of the Student's Aid Society, an organization recently formed to extend help to young women of moderate means to obtain an education at this admirable college endowed for their especial needs. Mr. A. W. Stetson, presiding by request called upon Rev. Dr. Hovey, of the Newton Theological Seminary to consecrate the work of the society by prayer. The report of the Secretary was then read and it was announced that Mrs. Caroline A. Wood, a wealthy and estimable lady of Cambridge, had endowed the first scholarship in Wellesley, by a donation of $5,000, and that Mr. W. O. Grover (of Grover & Baker) and Mr. D. N. Weston, of Boston, had also each donated a like sum for the same object. Then four young ladies, bearing wreaths of fragrant flowers, went forward to the pulpit, and presented to these liberal donors the mementoes of their gratitude in brief speeches of thanks. These exercises over the guests were given the option of being driven in the carriages to the neighboring grounds and gardens of Messrs. H. H. Hunnewell and Mr. W. E. Baker, or treated to a sail on the lake in the river barges of the different clubs. But of course, having the especial privilege, we took both. The unusual beauty of Mr. H.'s gardens with his high hedges and arches cut through them, the orange and lemon trees in full foliage, the antique mosses of ornamental trimming of the foliage of the trees were all admired. From the terraces of Mr. Hunnewell's, on the shore of the lake, a picturesque prospect of Wellesley College is had, which reminded us forcibly of Gray's allusion to a distant view of Eton College, perhaps from the towers of Windsor castle—

"Ye distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the watery glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade."

which with a slight alteration might be made very apropos to this view of Wellesley.

Taking carriages again a drive of a mile brought us to the very extensive grounds of Mr. W. E. Baker, rendered notable by the fetes he has given here, and especially by the reception of the Southern soldiers a few years ago. All the curiosities were placed at the observation of the guests, the bears in their enclosures, the buffaloes, and other things of interest. But greatest of all was the passage through an artificially constructed cave, made at great expense, where long intertwining labyrinths and one from one opening to another, and the light is sent down through colored glass upon the rocks below, which are cut as gargoyles, and all manner of expressions in the faces of animals and humans; here are found blue lakes and fountains and running waters, arches and pillars of shells and colored glass, etc.; one cave is of wood with supporting columns of old trees, and ferns of every conceivable kind, native and exotic, growing in the niches of the branches. The whole a certainly very interesting to visit, and is a realization of fairy fiction which one sees represented on the stage in spectacular melo-dramas.

One or two remarked that "this is the way that Mr. Baker prefers to spend his money, and that," (pointing across to the college) "the way Mr. Durant elects to spend his. Which do you prefer?" We will be so polite as not to give the answers that some made, for we were guests of both.

While some were thus enjoying this excursion, others were seated in the barges, and were rowed by the students, all gay in their different uniforms, out on the lake. The poet Longfellow (was it not singular?) had a delightful sail in the boat "Evangeline," the girls singing to him, the while, some of his own famous poetry. A little racing was had, for a slight spirit of rivalry exists among the different crews, the "freshmen" having the first right to the boats, then those of other classes belonging to the same crew. It did, indeed, sound a little odd to hear them talk of "freshmen," those beautiful girls, but then when they advance to Sophomores or Juniors it seems all right. They massed all their boats in the centre of the lake, before we returned to the shore, and they sang Tom Moore's Canadian boat song, and other songs, with peculiar effect, as the sun was dipping beyond the western hills.

We all returned to a delicious supper of strawberry short cake, and other nice edibles, some of varied flavor, bananas, and pine-apples, with some choice Mocha coffee and English breakfast tea, all which was very appetizing after the exhilarating excursion we had had.

Then we were summoned, for a final entertainment, to the college chapel, an artistic apartment, where the young ladies, and one or two gentlemen, (they could not get along without the aid of our brave sex after all) discoursed some choice classical music from the great composers. This part was timed to a nicety, and concluded so as to allow us to take our carriages again, and drive to the station, where our special train soon whirled us into Boston by 10 o'clock, after a day of unalloyed pleasure.

Space forbids what we had contemplated, a description of the general work of the college, its standard of scholarship, the prospects of future benefit to the women of our country, the potentiality of its advantages, and other matters. We should like to describe a visit to the basement, which we were invited to visit as a mark of special privilege, the kitchens, wash-rooms, and bakery where only men are employed. Here our sex is crushed down to its proper position! It is emblematic of the future, when woman's rights to a higher education shall prevail?

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The Boston Herald, moved by the misrepresentations of the democratic press, gives the following narrative of the adoption of the bill creating the electoral commission, showing that it is substantially a democratic measure which the democratic revolutionists of to-day are trying to repudiate:

The electoral commission was adopted on the recommendation of a majority report from a joint committee of the Senate and the House. This report was signed by seven Democrats and six Republicans. The Democrats of the committee were unanimous in its favor, the only dissenting voice came from a Republican. The supporters of Mr. Tilden, who were joint-inventors of the commission, stood in the foremost ranks of their party. They were the war horses of the campaign. The names tell the story, for each was, and still is, a household word in the ranks of the roots of the unterrified: Abram S. Hewitt, Bayard of Delaware, Thurman and Payne of Ohio, Springer of Illinois, Ransom of North Carolina, and Eppa Hunton, of Virginia. Strange hands these to lay a trap for the democracy. The bill to create the commission was managed in the House by Henry B. Payne. It was supported and warmly endorsed by nearly every Democrat of national reputation in the chamber. It was opposed to the bitter end by such "stalwart" Republicans as Conger of Michigan, Fort of Illinois, Frye of Maine and Kasson of Iowa. Even Garfield fought stubbornly against it, and derided the Democrats for their fear of civil war. When the measure came to a vote in the House it received, including pairs and declarations, only 33 Republican yeas, while 161 Democrats gave it their support. On the other hand, the nays included 69 Republicans and a scattered handful of 20 Democrats. Taking the entire Republican section in consideration, 30 per cent. voted for the bill, 64 per cent. against it, and 6 per cent. were undeclared. Of the Democratic section, 88 per cent. sustained the bill, 10 per cent. opposed it, and only 2 per cent. refrained from taking a position on the question. Every Democrat from New England appeared among the yeas. The Massachusetts Republicans also voted for it, with the exception of General Banks. But outside of Massachusetts the measure obtained only one Republican vote in five New England States. Perhaps the most significant feature of the division was shown in the act of Speaker Randall, who insisted upon being enrolled among the honored yeas. The scene is reported as follows: "The speaker—The occupant of the chair proposes to exercise his right to vote, secured to him by the constitution in his capacity as a representative from the state of Pennsylvania. The clerk will call my name." The clerk called the name of "Samuel J. Randall." The speaker voted "aye" amidst great applause upon the floor and in the galleries." Upon that scene we will let the curtain fall. Assuredly we have proved that bill to establish the electoral commission was a democratic measure in every sense of the word.

WORDS OF WISDOM. Self denial is a grand virtue.

Selfishness has a variety of disguises, but under the velvet you can always find the claw.

If it be important to know whether a man will cheat you, if he can, sound him, as to his willingness to help you cheat somebody else.

With time and patience the mulberry leaf becomes satin. What difficulty is there at which a man should quail, when a worm can accomplish so much from a leaf.

A man who covers himself with costly apparel and neglects his mind, is like one who illuminates the outside of his house and sits within in the dark.

Ignorance and deceit are two of the worst qualities to combat. It is vastly easier to dispute with a statesman than a blockhead.

If we would have powerful minds, we must think; if we would have faithful hearts, we must love; if we would have strong muscles, we must labor. These include all that's valuable in life.

The Maine Farmer urges farmers to double up on their root crops this season. They are enjoyed by all farm animals, and make the best accompaniment for dry fodder. They may be sowed till July 10th, and even later. The Farmer says:

The prospects of the season are full of promise—grass was seldom known to be better at this period; the fruit trees have blossomed abundantly; the area of all farm crops is larger than ever before known in the State; the feed is superior, and cheese factories are doing splendidly; farm labor is plenty, and the coming crops can be taken care of and harvested more cheaply than ever. No business in Maine presents so bright a future as that of farming.

STATE NEWS.

Androscoggin.

Mr. Abial Daly, a well known resident of Lewiston, died at the residence of his son, Sunday, of paralysis. He had an attack the Sunday previous and did not rally.

Bates' first Ivy Day will be celebrated next Wednesday, June 19th. The exercises will be of special interest to alumni, and to the public generally.

The Journal says: Edwin Noyes, Esq., was in Lewiston, Tuesday. He had in his pocket a note of the Continental Congress, entitling the bearer to receive "forty Spanish milled dollars." This note his grandfather received at the close of the Revolutionary war, in payment for his services, and this identical bill he tendered to a dealer for a bushel of corn and could not obtain it. He walked home from New York, where he was discharged, and was forced to pay $60.00 in continental paper money to be ferried across the Connecticut River.

The Journal says: A reminiscence of the December conflagration at Lewiston was brought to light Monday, by the police and a burning conscience. The mother of the man Champlain, who was recently sentenced for stealing from the Bates corporation, brought to Mrs. H. K. Prince a roll of velvet ribbon, which, she said, had been taken from the sidewalk in front of the store by the sister of her son's wife, at the time of the fire. She said that her conscience would not allow her to remain silent any longer. She informed the police, also, that a quantity of other stolen goods could be found in the possession of the same young lady. Marshal Quimby searched the premises, and found two rolls of the velvet, and also some black lace, which was identified by Mr. Prince. The girl was arrested, and tried in the Municipal Court, Monday afternoon. She plead guilty, but declared that the informant was as deeply implicated in the theft as she. A scene ensued between the two females, after the adjournment of court, which proved that peace had not brooded in the family. Alarming charges were bandied between them. A warrant was issued against the lady with the burning conscience, and her sincerity will be sounded by Judge Cornish.

Cumberland.

Two cases of cruelty to animals were reported to Mr. Sawyer Saturday afternoon. The first was that of a Portland builder who sold a horse to a stone mason. The mason found the horse was balky and told the seller. Thereupon the builder beat the animal terribly. The other case occurred in Stroudwater where the owner beat his horse with a pitchfork and stuck the pitchfork into him.

Kennebec.

The Oldtown Cheese Factory resumes operations June 24th, in care of S. T. Jackson, who has had charge of Jefferson factory for three years. The prospects of a good run are favorable.

Wm. H. Bossey, who had a leg amputated at Ashland, Aroostook county, a few weeks ago, was brought to Winslow, where he remained till his death, last Thursday. His system was unable to rally from the shock.

Lincoln.

The Times says, when the train for Rockland, Monday afternoon was about five miles from Wiscasset, the engineer saw a team traversing the cross road. The driver tried to get by before the train, and succeeded, but so narrow an escape from a collision that his tail-board was just grazed, and his horse frightened into running away and tipping over the wagon. The occupants, a Mrs. Proble, an old lady about 70, and a young lady, her daughter, and the fool of a driver were all thrown violently down a steep bank. The train stopped. The young lady had got up into the road, and, though somewhat bruised and very much confused, was all right; the idiot was sitting on the wagon wreck swearing away about the horse which was galloping down the road like mad, a mile away; the old lady was just where she was turned out, all in a heap and groaning terribly. Tender hands carried her up into the road and fixed her as comfortably as they could among the cushions, the all the while complaining sadly of her back. The brakeman was dispatched to the nearest house for assistance and upon his return the train departed. If Mrs. Proble survives, it is evident her constitution is a good one.

Oxford.

The buildings owned and occupied by Wallace J. Everett, on what is known as the Deacon Thayer place, in Paris, were burned Monday morning. Mr. Everett arose at about four o'clock, started a fire in the stove, did his chores and drove his cattle to pasture. On returning he saw fire issuing from the north side of the roof; he gave the alarm, and the neighbors quickly assembled, and by their efforts most all of the household furniture farming tools, &c., were saved. The house, sheds, barn and other buildings, were totally destroyed. Loss about $2000, insured for $1500. It is supposed that the fire caught in the upper chamber through a defect in the chimney. In August 1870, the barn on this place was struck by lightning and burned; again last fall, the house caught from a defective flue, but the fire was extinguished by Mr. Everett. The affair is proverbially a successful one, and the fire fiend has again proven the truth of that proverb.

York.

Tuesday a man entered the jewelry establishment of R. K. Tremblay in Saco, and while the back of one of the persons in attendance was turned stole several rings from a tray. Suspicion fell upon Albert Hurd and Lewis arrested by Deputy Marshal Kenison. Later search was made for the rings and they were found in Chas. Hurd's store. Albert Hurd was delivered into the hands of Saco officials.

About six o'clock Sunday evening Officer Staver while coming up Storer street Saco, saw smoke issuing from a shed in the rear of D. F. Littlefield's store. Hastening to the locality he found a box, containing fresh hay, on fire, but not so far advanced but it was rapidly extinguished. The early discovery was very fortunate as the in close proximity are several frame structures and had the fire got well started considerable damage would have been done. It is believed the fire was set by boys.

EXCHORING A HORSE.—They tell of an old mariner who keeps a little hotel down here, writes a correspondent from Coney Island, New York's celebrated seaside resort. His wife was very anxious to have a horse, an animal in which the old gentleman took but little stock, and the old lady finally won her point and got her horse. The steed was of an erratic and playful disposition, and used, on the least provocation, to tear madly along the beach, and succeeded in spilling the old lady out several times. At last the captain, who had never driven the beast, volunteered to break him of his vicious habit, so getting another old salt to assist him, he procured a kedge anchor with a stout line attached. Fastening the end of the line around the axle, and putting the anchor in the wagon, the fiery untamed was hitched up, and the two old gents started out for a drive along the shore. Soon the vivacious charger espied something which gave him an excuse to run away, and he immediately dashed off with frightful velocity.

The captain dropped the reins, and summoned all hands to "let go the anchor." The anchor was let go, and caught firmly in the sand. The unsuspecting quadruped pranced joyously along until he got to the end of the rope, and then he paused—paused so suddenly that the wagon was demolished, and the two old gentlemen shot up into the air, like a couple of sky-rockets, coming down in a fearfully dilapidated condition.

It is told of an Advent brother in Westfield, Mass., who recently caught a man stealing meat from his market, that in reply to his plea to be let off and his declaration that God helping him, he would never steal again the brother said: "God helping you! Why you scoundrel, if I hadn't caught you stealing, you never would have known there was a God."

AN OUTRAGE.

A person who should go into the middle of the public street at high noon and assert [illegible] ... knows to be deliberate falsehood. He even goes so far as to assume to subject us to catechism upon questions on which our position is as clearly defined and universally-recognized as his own "pestilent" disloyalty throughout the rebellion, or his utterly unscrupulous warfare upon every principle of public honor, morality, and decency ever since.

We find ourself as naturally and inevitably arrayed against him, in upholding the public faith and the public welfare, against the mad attempt of demagogues to plunge the Nation into a chaos of inflation and repudiation, as we have found ourself arrayed against him on every public question involving the maintenance of law, the preservation of public order, the suppression of vice, and the promotion of intelligence, sobriety and patriotism among the people. For years, upon every such question he has assumed the championship of lawlessness, disorder, vice ignorance, rum and disloyalty.

For years an outcast and a pariah even in the political party which has found its most burning shame in his affiliation; maintaining his poisonous grip solely by his power for evil; the decent Democracy of his own [illegible] ... to the ignorant and depraved to raise the Red Flag of the Commune, and to slink away by the light of the conflagration he has helped to kindle, as he [illegible] ... of treason in 1861.

DEATH OF WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The telegraph brings the not unexpected announcement of the death of William Cullen Bryant, the venerable poet and journalist, who has been lying in a critical state since his injury by a fall on the steps of a friend's house, after having delivered an address under a heating sun. [illegible] ... He was a native of New Hampshire; and after two years in Williams College engaged in studying law which he commenced practicing in Plainfield. His poetical genius was manifested in early boyhood, and at 14 some of his writings were published. In his 19th year he wrote the poem "Thanatopsis" which has made him famous, and which has a permanent place as one of the most impressive and beautiful in the English language. He removed to New York in 1825 and was engaged upon several publications until 1826 when he assumed the connection with the Evening Post, that resulted in his becoming its editor and proprietor, which relation he maintained during his life. He has been a valuable contributor to literature aside from editorial work, among his most noteworthy achievements being a translation of Homer's "Iliad" which was published in 1870. His 70th and 80th birth-day anniversaries were celebrated by literary festivals in which the most prominent literary writers participated, and his last public act was the delivery of an address at the unveiling of the bust of Mazzini in Central Park. As he delivered the impassioned peroration, he stepped out from the shelter of an umbrella that had been held over him, and stood with bared head in the full glare of the sun. He walked away from the Park with a friend, at the entrance of whose home he fell and received the injuries which hastened the close of a long and distinguished life.

A PLANK FOR THE PLATFORM.

As the Bangor Commercial is very urgently demanding that its financial doctrine shall be incorporated in the Democratic State platform to be adopted at Portland, we suggest, without charge, to Messrs. Sprague, [illegible] and others of whom [illegible] ... by him in his paper in January of the present year:

(From the Bangor Commercial.)

"There is no stringency in the Money Market at all. Probably there has never been a time in the whole history of the country when there was so much idle money as now; and never a time when it could be obtained in such abundance and on such favorable terms on good securities, as at this very hour."

The Rev. Dr. Edwards, of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, has in the last number of his paper a ringing editorial on the Potter investigation, in which he offers this advice to Methodists: "Pray for the Republic—but let no voter go to his knees until he promises God that he will go to the polls and do his duty there. Let every pastor speak out! A church of sixteen hundred thousand members has power with God, and our eleven thousand pastors will serve as an army—each a General. We are not a party lines, but be sure to preach, pray, vote, and if necessary fight for the Republic. Traitors shall not take the helm!"

(From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.)

"WE TOLD YOU SO."

It has long been the policy of the Southern Democrats or ex-Confederates to accomplish their ends [illegible] ... surrender of power into the hands of the old enemies of the Union.

What we said would come to pass has come to pass. The pensioning of rebel soldiers has come to be a demand now, not by the low blatherskites of the border alone, but by those among the leaders of this section who have heretofore been regarded as such conservative and sensible.

Henry Watterson, editor of a rebel paper during the war and editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal since the war, delivered an address recently at the National Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio. In the course of this address he said:

I should like to be emperor for one day. I would double the pension of every one of you. I would multiply institutions of this kind, and, in dealing with pensioners of Government, with no niggardly hand. I would not stop at Mason's and Dixon's line, but would see to it that the crippled veterans of the South got a little along with the rest. In sober earnest I would ask nothing for myself that I am not ready to give; but I do ask all for myself that I am ready to give. In a Republic there must be no discrimination. Equality is indispensable to fraternity.

The occasion for the announcement of this Southern programme was chosen so that the declaration might not alarm the people or provoke opposition. The orator was speaking to old soldiers of other old soldiers, and he simply said he would double the pensions of the crippled Union veterans, and would pay the same to the Confederate veterans. This will be spoken of as a magnificent burst of generosity, and will be quoted as an evidence of Mr. Watterson's kindness of heart. After a little experimental talk of this kind, another step will be taken, and we will come to the second clause of Mr. Watterson's proposition. Having declared that rebel soldiers ought to receive the same pensions as Union soldiers, he says this equality is indispensable to fraternity, and that in the public there must be no discrimination. [illegible] ... the Union soldiers [illegible] in the same conflict.

This is a queer proposition, but it is in keeping with others coming from the same quarter. It means that the Confederate element feels that it is already the aid of the Democratic party to rule the country, and that there is no longer any need of concealment of motives or purposes.

THE POTTER INQUIRY.

Washington, June 11. Anderson was cross-examined for a brief [illegible] ... that the signature of Weber to the Weber-Anderson agreement was forged. Experts who have examined it are understood to be of opinion that the words "and D. A. Weber" were written in the counterfeit [illegible] ... Anderson also stated that he never said to anybody that the alleged Sherman letter was also signed by Stoughton. Yet ex-Congressman Darrell stated in his deposition that Anderson told him that Stoughton's signature was also appended to the document. Anderson will also find it difficult to explain why he received $500 from a Democratic politician named Wells at Baton Rouge at the time he made out his returns without the protest. The purpose of the cross-examination appeared to be to lay the foundation to prove that he received the $500 because he did not file a protest. Anderson has constantly sworn, too, that the purpose of the Republican conspiracy was to have no election in the Feliciana parishes. Yet an original letter from himself to Lieutenant-Governor Antoine was produced, showing that he, Anderson, was actively engaged in organizing the negro vote for the Republicans.

A STRIKE [illegible].

Ex-Congressman Darrell held the stand throughout the afternoon. The Democrats [illegible] ... "They were not worth the paper." ... Mrs. Jenks also [illegible] the Stoughton document.

One of the [illegible] planks of the [illegible] ... the contraction of the volume of greenbacks [illegible] per cent. of the new national bank notes issued, with the intent of reducing the greenbacks to $300,000,000. A week before the Maine convention met, this contraction of greenback currency ceased by virtue of an act of Congress, leaving the volume of greenbacks at $346,000,000; but our State greenbackers overlooked the fact that the progress of events had dropped out one plank of their creed, and went on resolving against "contraction." One year hence, the greenbackers will find all the other planks of their platform also knocked out from under them by the course of events.—Lewiston Journal.

The Portland Advertiser has burst out in a new place. [illegible] ... President Hayes, and at the same time demolishing THE BANGOR WHIG and COURIER ... [illegible] ... gives to the demnation for the [illegible] ... knew the President of the "fraud-ulent" ... Can it be that there is another Cilician [illegible] society in Portland of which we have not heard? Our contemporary has evidently become muddled in contemplating that closing [illegible].

A [illegible] ... yesterday "if we had heard a rumor that Mr. Smith [illegible] ... [illegible] privileges at Orleans with a view to the manufacture of paper for [illegible]."

LEWISTON, ME., June 12th. This afternoon, the Class of '79, Bates, inaugurated ivy Day exercises. A procession was formed at [illegible] o'clock and marched through the streets [illegible] to the chapel, where an oration was delivered by R. F. Johonnett, and also a poem by C. E. Files, after which the usual presentations were made. The Class was fortunate in having all the out-door exercises between the showers.

A heavy shower occurred this afternoon, accompanied by hail, which damaged tender plants.

MAINE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.
Officers Elected.

PORTLAND, June 12. The Maine Medical Association elected to-day [illegible], of Lewiston, President; A. J. [illegible], of Freedom, and J. A. Donovan, of Lewiston, Vice Presidents; [illegible] of Portland, Treasurer; [illegible] of Portland, Corresponding Secretary; Chas. O. Hunt, of Portland, Recording Secretary. An interesting series of [illegible] occupied most of to-day's session, which was finally ended by admitting [illegible] portion of the members.

At the evening session, the Board of Censors stated that Dr. Files had appeared before them and acknowledged that in publishing an article in the Argus he violated the code of ethics, and wished to apologize to the Association. They accordingly recommended that he be reinstated in the Maine Medical Association; and he was accordingly reinstated.

WASHINGTON, June 12. The Potter Committee met at [illegible] P. M., [illegible] [illegible]

Q.—Did he ever have conversation with you in which he stated that he had a conversation with Matthews in which he threatened Matthews?

A.—Shortly after my conversation with Peter Anderson [illegible] he had seen Matthews and threatened him with the publication of the documents in his possession, and pictured to him the scandal it would make, and that [illegible] replied Matthews [illegible]

[illegible]

About a week after the [illegible] [illegible]

Q.—Did you ever have a conversation with Sherman about the so-called Sherman letter?

A.—No, sir, none whatever. [illegible]

Q.—If there was anything in these [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] desired to gain his support and stated he desired to assist his friends, having a good position himself.

Q.—How did you come to write Anderson urging him to write Matthews [illegible] in your behalf regarding the New Orleans collectorship, even after the quarrel between Anderson and Matthews?

A.—Well, I knew that Matthews was well disposed toward Anderson even after the conversation between them occurred in which the latter threatened publication of documents, and that he had received letters from Anderson after that time.

Witness was then examined at length by [illegible] [illegible]

Q.—Did Anderson say anything to you about any document signed, or [illegible] agreement [illegible]

[illegible]

Q.—Were you not surprised that so able a lawyer, so honorable a statesman and a United States Senator would employ such a messenger as Anderson?

A.—I cannot say that I was surprised.
